

College of Nursing students attitudes toward specialization

Search provided by

Dr. successful Maamouri

Abstract Search

The study aimed to identify trends in students of the Faculty of Nursing University of Babylon, about their respective Are there statistically significant differences between the students of the College of Nursing trends toward specialization depending on the variables of sex and stage. In order to achieve the objectives of the research, the researcher built a scale consisting of (38), paragraph measure trends in students toward specialization. The research sample was composed of (114) students and demanded of the localities first and third. The researcher used statistical methods Artbaz Pearson coefficient and Spearman Brown and Altaúa test for independent variables. The results of research that there are positive trends toward specialization for males and females. The number of students who have positive attitudes (103) of the total sample and the total amount of (114) and those who have attained the negative attitudes (7) and neutral (4) with an average of (148) and Anhravr standard of (26.53). Did not show statistically significant differences between the sample according to the variables of sex - Phase allocated to the nursing profession